Our research shows:

The vast majority of all respondents agree that an additional offering supporting expat families fulfils a need!

- The availability of an independent go-to person is an important asset for expats.
- Social integration is important to feel 'at home' but it is not easy to make friends here.
- Coaching and mediation become more important support services the longer an expat is in Switzerland.
- Support for the expat spouse is a critical factor – but seems hard to get.

Quotes from Expats:

"Something bespoke to the family in question is missing. It can be frustrating when you're uprooting your entire family and the employer won't recognise the unique needs of your family."

"There should be more guidance, support, and advice for the trailing spouses."

"... integration here [in Switzerland] cannot happen without professional support as the Swiss culture makes socializing with locals virtually impossible."
